GENEALOGICAL ANNALS

OF

Anthony and Barbara Eschbach,

With brief Records of their Children and Descendants.

"Howe'er it be, it seems to me,
'Tis only noble to be good;
Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."

INTRODUCTION.

It is interesting as well as instructive to study the history of our ancestors. In this way, we come the better to understand through what difficulties, trials and labors they passed, in locating and providing for families, that have since won their way to position and influence.

These humble annals have been gathered and are now published not for the gain of glory, but for the preservation of genealogical history.

They are made as concise as possible, and are not presented as complete, but as a contribution towards any work of that kind, which may hereafter be undertaken. If this work had been begun 25 or more years ago, while a few of those who had known some of the principal actors were yet alive, much interesting detail, now irrevocably lost, might have been preserved.

Much pains has been taken by a comparison of family Bible registers, and other records, and through extensive correspondence, to render the statistics attempted as full, and the statements made as accurate as possible.

If I have in any measure succeeded in rescuing from oblivion the memory of some of our ancestors, who aided in shaping the character and destiny of our land, and have preserved to posterity names from whom it is an honor to claim descent, I shall consider myself well rewarded for the time and effort expended.

EDMUND RISHEL ESCHBACH.

MEMORIAL.

JOHN ESCHBACH.

The founder of the family with whose immediate history we are concerned, was John, the son of John and Anna Mary Eschbach, Palatines, who arrived at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, November 30, 1750, having come in the ship "Sand-wich," Hazelhood captain, from Rotterdam, last from "Cowes," with 200 passengers.,

He was born in the Palatinate, Germany, December 15, 1747.

The family settled in that part of Northampton County, Pennsylvania, which is now known as Lehigh County. Here he grew to manhood in the bosom of a christian family, and was with his parents in the communion of the Reformed Church. He learned a trade in early youth, and with characteristic enterprise acquired sufficient means to commence business on his own account, soon after he attained his majority. Having established himself in trade, the next important step was to settle himself for life.

In the year 1769 he married Anna Mary Busch, who was born in the Palatinate, Germany, May 18, 1749. Her father, John Michael Busch, emigrated with his family from the "Palatinate," and landed in Philadelphia, November 25, 1740. They were thrifty, pious people and exemplary members of the Reformed Church.

John Eschbach having established a home, now applied himself earnestly to the prosecution of his business. Industrious, frugal and regular in all his habits, he was prospered, so as to be enabled not only to provide for his steadily growing family, but also to lay by something with which he might in later years secure a coveted home of his own.

The pious example of his ancestors, and the early teachings of his parents were not lost on him. He had been reared in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, therefore, whilst "diligent in business, he was also fervent in spirit." His domestic relations were most happy. He found a true help-meet in his wife. They shared each others burdens, while love nerved them to do and to dare whatever might be necessary. Ten children were born to them, five sons and five daughters, all but one of whom, who died in childhood, survived them. They saw their children grow up around them, become members of the church, and useful and respected members of society. As thoughtful and considerate parents, they were concerned that their children might have better opportunities to become well settled in life than they could provide for them in the locality in which they were living. After much thought and prayer, they determined in the fear of God, to remove to the frontier settlements, and make homes for themselves in a new, and comparatively uncultivated country.

Early in the fall of 1804, the father, together with his second son Anthony, made the trip on horseback, from Northampton to Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, portions of which journey was regarded as through a wilderness. This was before turnpikes were built across the mountains or bridges across the streams. Sometimes there was only an Indian trail to indicate the line of travel. They purchased a tract of 247 acres of land at $26.50 per acre, in what is now Turbut and Lewis townships, Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, from John Ray, an Irish bachelor, who lived in very primitive style on a section of this land.

In the spring of 1805, he, with his son Anthony, who had joined in the purchase of land, moved their families over the mountains to this new location, with three four-horse teams, bringing with them their cows, and what were considered the necessities of life, including their outfit of mechanics tools. The journey was successfully made. The land was divided between father and son. Each of them proceeded during the first summer to fell the forest and to erect a substantial log house. Into these houses their families were gathered for shelter and protection.

The progress of a century is so great that one can scarcely realize what has been accomplished. Settlements that were mere hamlets, have grown into stately boroughs and populous cities. Many beautiful and thrifty towns exist that were not thought of at the beginning of the century.

Finely constructed roads have taken the place of Indian trails, and all that remains of the rude and savage race that once peopled and claimed this territory as their home are the stone relics now found in antiquarian collections. The territory into which they moved, is now indeed a rural paradise. The scenery is diversified and picturesque. Here now dwells a progressive, enterprising and cultured people, surrounded with all the comforts that prosperity can confer upon them.

Their children all married, and for the most part settled around them. Their descendants are among the most useful and valued citizens in church and state.

That which induced father and son to locate in this particular locality, was the fact, that others of their acquaintance, and of the same religious faith, had a year or two earlier located here. They would constitute a community, would have congenial neighbors, and the privileges of their own church for themselves and their families.

This country at that time was sparsely settled. Ministers were few in number, and the people gladly welcomed whoever came in the name of their church, to minister to them in spiritual things. The fragmentary records of those days, testify to the earnest, self-denying and pious labors of the fathers who laid the foundations of the church in that locality. To recount the heroic deeds of the sainted dead, and commend them to the gratitude and favor of the living is amongst our most agreeable and noble duties.

The people of the Reformed faith were probably organized into a congregation prior to the arrival of John Eschbach in the community, but already in the fall of 1805, he was one of the elders of the congregation, and continued to be in office to the day of his death. As at this time the congregation had no house of worship, services were held in the summer in the barn of Elders John Eschbach or George Stahl, and in the winter in the houses of one or the other of these fathers of the church.

In the year 1809, a parcel of ground was bought and a building erected thereon designed for both church and school purposes.

In the fall of 1822, a regular pastoral charge was constituted of which this congregation was made a part, known as the "Paradise charge."

In the year 1823, the name "Paradise," first occurs in the minutes of the synod, as the name of this congregation. Prior to this date, the organization is always officially referred to as "Eschbach's" or "Eschbach's School House."

It is a matter of justifiable pride to learn from the records of this congregation that from the year 1805, to the present 1902, with but brief interruptions, there has been a succession in the eldership of this congregation, one of the family bearing the Eschbach name. John was after his death succeeded by his son Anthony, and he by his son David, and he by his son Albert, the present incumbent.

These simple, silent records are eloquent in commendation of the integrity, piety, usefulness and positive christian influence of the family in the community, for all that is pure in life and ennobling in citizenship. John Eschbach and his faithful wife served well their generation and have entered into rest. Their remains lie side by side in the grave yard adjoining the Paradise Church, Turbut Township, Northumberland County, Pennsylvania. Earths fitful dreams are over, and we rejoice in believing that among the redeemed, they sing the "Song of Moses and the Lamb."

They left behind them one treasure as a legacy, an inestimable heritage to their descendants—a good name.

Two neat marble slabs at the head of their graves record these facts:

JOHN,

Son of JOHN and ANNA MARY ESCHBACH.

ANTHONY ESCHBACH.

ANTHONY ESCHBACH was the second child of John and Anna Mary Eschbach. He was born in Northampton County, Pa., Jan. 28, 1772. According to the usage of the Reformed Church, of which his parents were members, he was baptized in infancy, carefully nurtured in the bosom of a christian family and confirmed at the age of sixteen.

He was born in troublous times and nursed in the cradle of liberty. The colonies were resisting the exactions of the mother country. The dormant patriotism of the people was aroused. The blood of freemen coursed hotly through their veins. A long catalogue of wrongs had been unheeded by the English government. The American people would brook the insult no longer. The stirring and critical events, which occurred so early in his history deeply impressed him, so that he remembered and recounted many things that occurred in connection with the closing struggles of the war of independence.

His educational advantages were limited. The times were too stirring and the exactions too great to admit of much opportunity for schools. He, however, had the education that comes from practical contact with men and things, amid the emergencies that were forced upon the people. He was keenly alive to what was transpiring in the nation. He was almost twelve years of age when the Continental Army was disbanded by an Act of Congress.

The returned soldiers congregated at his father's shop, and there often recounted their trials and hardships in the army. The lad listened with breathless interest to the recital of these experiences. He was sixteen years of age when George Washington was created the first President of the United States. A vivid memory of these events lived with him to the close of his life.

His father being a blacksmith, he was brought up to that business. He continued to work with his father, up to the time of his marriage, after which event he conducted business on his own account.

In the spring of 1797, he married BARBARA ROMIG, the fourth child and only daughter of ADAM and CATHARINE BUTZ ROMIG. This marriage relation was most congenial and happy.

In 1805, he gathered up his young family and all his earthly effects and together with his father and all his father's family, except his eldest brother John, who was married and settled in the old home, emigrated to Northumberland County, Pennsylvania. They travelled each with his own and one hired four-horse team, over rough and unfrequented roads. This was before turnpikes were made or bridges built. The larger streams which could not be safely forded, had to be ferried. He had at this time three children, the youngest, a babe about six months old, which its mother carried in her arms, riding the family mare, on a side saddle, after the wagons. The journey was safely made.

The land which father and son had purchased jointly, was divided. Roads were laid out as they exist to this day. He took possession of the dwelling, which John Ray, the former owner had occupied, and lived in it the first year. It was a poorly constructed log cabin, set on wooden posts about three feet above the ground. It was small and comfortless, but afforded the only shelter and protection, he could at the time, secure for his young family. He felled the forest, and at once erected a log barn on the site of which the present large barn stands. During the following year he erected a log house, 16 by 20 feet, close, warm and comfortable, as compared with the one he left, and moved into it in the fall of 1806. The mutual sacrifices, thrift and frugality of husband and wife enabled them to build a larger house in 1816, which is still standing and forms a part of the residence since then continuously occupied by his descendants bearing the Eschbach name.

Immediately upon their settlement in the new home, they identified themselves with the Reformed congregation, which was but recently organized. On the church record his name occurs as one of those who assisted with his means and personal labor, in the erection of the building in 1809, designed for church and school purposes. It was a large, one-story log house with a partition through the middle. One of the apartments was used for school purposes during week days, and on Sunday, the partition, which was hung by hinges on one of the joists, was swung up, so as to throw the two apartments into one room for preaching service.

He was chosen an Elder of this congregation in 1811, and except for two intervals of a year or two each, he was continued in the office to the day of his death in 1834.

A new church was built jointly by the Reformed and Lutheran congregations in 1823 and 1824. That building was only removed in the spring of 1902, after having stood untenanted for years. The material was used in the construction of the present sexton's house of the Reformed Congregation.

He was one of the Building Committee of the Reformed congregation in the construction of that Union Church. It was dedicated in August, 1824. Rev. Samuel Gutelius was the Reformed minister who had charge of the service.

To the day of his death, Anthony Eschbach was prominent and useful in the church and the community in which he lived. He died suddenly from an attack of apoplexy on May 10, 1834, at the age of 62 years, 3 months and 12 days. He left home in the morning on horseback to transact some business, and when several miles from home, he received the stroke, fell from his horse, and was just able to crawl to the road side, where his lifeless body was found several hours after his death.

His wife survived him twenty years, and was truly a widow. As soon as the estate of her husband could be settled, she made her home with her oldest son, who had purchased the home place. About the year 1849 she sustained a double injury in breaking her arm and thigh. She had gone with the wife of her youngest son in a buggy to visit some relatives. On their return to her home, as she was getting out of the buggy, the horse took fright, and began to kick and run. By a kick her fore arm was broken, which loosened her hold on the conveyance, her clothing caught on the step in her fall, she was dragged some distance and her thigh broken. The horse soon broke loose from the conveyance, which probably saved her life. Her companion who remained in the buggy was unharmed. The writer, then a lad of fourteen, witnessed the accident from a short distance.

This crippled her for the remainder of her life, but she bore her sufferings and disability with sweet christian resignation. She was a devoted wife and mother, and her living grand children of today rise up to "call her memory blessed."

Her remains lie by the side of her husband in the Reformed graveyard at the Paradise Church, Northumberland County, Pennsylvania.

Two plain marble slabs record the following facts:

II.

DAVID ESCHBACH.

David was the third child and oldest living son of Anthony and Barbara Eschbach. He was born in what is now Lehigh County, Pennsylvania, October 27, 1802, and was baptized in his infancy. When he was less than three years of age his parents moved to Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, to a locality which because of its attractive surroundings, soon came to be known as "Paradise," a name which it still bears. For rural beauty, natural fertility of soil, and charming scenery, it is rarely equalled by any district of like size, in this country. It is universally agreed that the name has been worthily bestowed. In his early youth the family had few comforts, but such as they had, all shared together with a cheerful spirit. The educational advantages of that day were limited. The public school system came much later. The residents of the community joined together in the erection of a school house of logs, about 20 feet square, about a half mile from the family residence. When an acceptable teacher could be secured, a school was conducted during the winter months. Pupils of both sexes were admitted between the ages of five and twenty-five years. The language spoken in the home, at this time, was German, and it was difficult for such children to get on well with English lessons. They were often sneeringly called "The Dutch" by the English-speaking children. David was an energetic, fearless boy, and soon made his way in school and out of it. These irregular school privileges continued until he entered his sixteenth year, after which his services were required at home. He had, however, by this time acquired a taste for knowledge, and continued to improve his leisure hours at home, by reading such good books as he could secure. At the age of eighteen he commenced to take his county paper, and read it continuously to the day of his death. When the Reformed Church paper was started, he became a subscriber, and a careful reader of the same throughout his entire life. He had an intelligent conception of what was transpiring in church and state.

His mother was very fond of music, and had a sweet, clear voice. From her he learned to sing, and was soon recognized as having unusual gifts as a singer. This was before the advent of church choirs. He became the recognized leader of the congregational singing at a comparatively early age, and as late as 1860 was still doing service in this capacity in the congregation to which he belonged. By his own effort he learned to play the organ, and other musical instruments, so as to use them with good effect in the church services. This was the aim and end of his musical efforts. It was with him a service of love, and never of pecuniary reward.

He was carefully instructed in the teachings of the Heidelberg Catechism when from twelve to fifteen years of age. The German language was used, which he had learned to read and write from his parents. In the spring of 1818, he was confirmed in a class of twenty-six, by Rev.

Yost H. Fries, then pastor of the Paradise congregation.

A few years later, Rev. Samuel Gutelius succeeded to this pastorate. He was at the time unmarried, and made his home at John Philip Eschbach's, an uncle to David, on the adjoining farm. He became a comrade of Rev. Gutelius, was much in his society, and occasionally accompanied him on horseback to his several preaching points. This association he ever recognized as having been of great benefit to him.

On October 14, 1824, he married Elizabeth, the only child of Peter and Mary Heimbach Rishel, of Chilisquaque township, Northumberland County, Pennsylvania; Rev. S. Gutelius performed the ceremony at the home of the bride. She was born May 18, 1806.

At the urgent request of his wife's parents, he went to live with them in the spring of 1825, and for ten years conducted their farm.

On May 10, 1834, his father, Anthony Eschbach, died suddenly of apoplexy. He was the oldest living son of his now widowed mother, and she called on him for help and support. She desired to retain in the family the home to which she had given so much of her life and labor, and besides this, a sister and brother, who were yet minors, looked up to him for assistance in providing them and their mother a home. Under the pressure of these circumstances he returned to the home of his youth, and to the relief and comfort of his mother, in 1835.

He settled up his father's estate, and purchased the home place. His mother retained her home with him to the time of her death, and his sister and brother remained in his home, until they were severally married.

Mr. and Mrs. Rishel, his wife's parents, were not happy in being separated from their only child, so they sold their home, and bought a small property adjoining their daughter's home, in 1839. Here they lived and died. After their death, he settled up their estate, and purchased their property as a home for himself and his family in his declining years.

When he returned to Paradise, he resumed his active relations with the Reformed congregation there. In 1840 he was elected to the Consistory, and made its secretary, which office he continued to fill to the day of his death, an unbroken period of 39 years.

The first Sunday school was organized there about 1840, and although he had never himself enjoyed Sunday school advantages, he was made superintendent, and for many years served in that capacity. He was for 61 years a communicant member of the church, and during 40 years of this period was a member of the Consistory. He filled the office of Elder for 32 consecutive years. He served twice, on Church Building Committees, and was each time treasurer of the committee. He was elected and served 17 times as Delegate Elder to the annual sessions of his Classis. He represented his Classis, by its selection, at the annual sessions of Synod 9 times, and was present as a Delegate at the sessions of the General Synod in 1886, 1875 and 1878.

He never sought office, either in church or state, and never accepted an office with emoluments. He was deeply interested in the cause of education, and served on the School Board of his township, at different times, for 15 years.

He was a man of integrity and good judgment; a man of prayer and faith. His counsel and advice were freely sought by his neighbors and acquaintances, and were as freely and cheerfully given. This simple statement of facts, speaks for itself, and is the best eulogy on his life that could be uttered.

His wife with whom he lived in happy wedlock for over 20 years, was taken ill with typhoid fever, and died October 20, 1844, aged 37 years, 2 months and 2 days, leaving four children, two sons and two daughters, the oldest nine and the youngest three years of age, at the time of her death. Her remains lie in the Paradise grave yard by the side of her parents.

He was now left with a helpless young family, and entirely dependant upon hired help. The experience was trying and unsatisfactory. This induced him to marry again, earlier than he would probably otherwise have done.

His second marriage was with his cousin, Sarah, daughter of John Philip and Mary Eschbach. She was born in Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, February 13, 1822, and married September 4, 1845. She became the mother of seven living children, six sons and one daughter. She was a faithful wife and devoted mother. To the children of her husband, by his former marriage, she was kind, considerate and helpful. They rise up to call her memory blessed.

When about 70 years of age he removed from the farm, to the home adjoining it, where he spent the evening of his days, and where his widow lived to the time of her death.

He died surrounded by his family, February 15, 1879, aged 76 years, 3 months and 18 days. His funeral sermon was preached in the Paradise Church, by the Rev. John K. Millett, his pastor, from 2 Cor. iv, 7-8, a text which he had himself selected for this occasion some years before his death. The ground at the time was covered with a beautiful sheet of fresh snow, when a large concourse of friends and neighbors, in sleighs and sleds accompanied his remains to this service and his last resting place.

His widow survived him 14 years, when she too entered into rest, from general debility, resulting from an attack of la grippe, July 30, 1893, aged 71 years, 5 months and 17 days. Her funeral services were conducted by Rev. Daniel E. Schroedler, her pastor. The sermon was preached in the Paradise Church, from Psalm xiv, 1, in the presence of a large concourse of relatives, friends and neighbors. Her remains lie in the family lot, by the side of her husband, adjoining the Paradise Church.

Their graves are properly marked and record the following facts:

DAVID ESCHBACH.

BORN OCTOBER 27, 1802.

DIED FEBRUARY 15, 1879.

Aged 76 yrs, 3 months, 18 days.

ELIZABETH RISHEL,

Wife of David Eschbach,

BORN NOVEMBER 18, 1806.

DIED OCTOBER 20, 1844.

Aged 37 yrs. 2 months, 2 days.

They had four children, two sons and two daughters:

EDMUND RISHEL,

MARY CLARISSA,

ELIZABETH BARBARA,

DAVID JOSHUA.

1. EDMUND RISHEL, was born at Paradise, Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, November 9, 1835, baptized by Rev. Daniel Gring, November 22, 1835, and confirmed in the Reformed Church, by Rev. Henry Wiegand, at McEwensville, Pennsylvania, at the age of sixteen. He was prepared for college at the McEwensville Academy under Low Rynearson; entered the Sophomore class of Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, with the Class of 1856; was graduated in 1859, and completed his theological studies at the seminary at Mercersburg, Pennsylvania, in 1861. He was licensed to preach the Gospel, September 30, 1861, at the Synod of Easton, Pennsylvania, and ordained to the Holy Ministry, in the Reformed Church, by a committee of Westmoreland Classis, October 30, 1861, and at the same date installed pastor of the Somerset Charge, in Somerset, Pennsylvania. He took the degree of A. M. in course in 1863, and had conferred on him the Honorary Degree of D. D., June 18, 1878, by Heidelberg College, Ohio.

He was married November 9, 1864 to Mary Susan, second daughter of Daniel and Catharine W. Doll, of Martinsburg, W. Va., where she was born August 20, 1838. The marriage ceremony was performed in the Reformed Church at Martinsburg by the Rev. Wm. D. Hanson, resident rector of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the only minister available at the time, because of the blockade existing by reason of the Civil War. A permit to enter and to leave the town was required by the Provost Marshal, of the Federal troops, at the time in command of the place, and that was only granted upon taking the oath of allegiance to the United States Government.

He served one year as pastor of the charge in Somerset, Pennsylvania, and then became the assistant of Rev. Elias Heiner, D. D., pastor of the First Reformed Church, of Baltimore, Md.; succeeded to this pastorate, on the death of Dr. Heiner, in 1863, and continued in the service of this congregation for eleven and a half years, until June 12, 1874, when he became pastor of the Evangelical Reformed Church, of Frederick, Md., where he continues in active service.

They have two children: Catharine Elizabeth, born at Martinsburg, W. Va., September 5, 1865, and baptized November 2, 1865, by the Rev. Dr. B. C. Wolff.

Mary Susan, born in Baltimore, Md., January 1, 1869, and baptized in the Reformed Church there, by the Rev. Wm. C. Cremer.

They are both unmarried, and live with their parents at Frederick, Md.

2. MARY CLARISSA, was born at Paradise, Pennsylvania, July 24, 1837, baptized by Rev. Daniel Gring in infancy, married by Rev. Henry Weigand, December 15, 1858, to Benivelle Schaeffer, from near McEwensville, Pennsylvania. They now live at Beloit, Kansas. They have five children, two sons and three daughters as follows:

- (1.) Calvin Edmund, born near McEwensville, Pennsylvania, March 7, 1859, baptized in infancy by Rev. Henry Wiegand, and married January 29, 1878, to Alice Shurtz, of Michigan. They now live in Kansas, and have one child, Beulah Altie, born ——— 1898.

V.

JOHN ANTHONY, was born at Paradise, Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, July 24, 1819; baptized by Rev. Yost H. Fries in infancy; confirmed by Rev. Daniel Gring in 1836, and married by him, October 27, 1840 to Mary, daughter of Daniel Follmer, of Columbia, now Montour County, Pennsylvania, who was born April 3, 1819.

In the spring of 1850, he removed his family from Turbut Township, Pennsylvania, and settled in Niagara County, New York. About ten years later he removed to Tama County, Iowa, where the country was at the time but sparsely settled. Here he endured hardships and exposure, in the strenuous battle for success, that superinduced great suffering from inflammatory rheumatism during the later years of his life.'

Some time after coming to Iowa, the spelling of the name "Eschbach" was corrupted to "Eshbaugh," and adopted by him, the reason for which is not known to the writer. He died at Mt. Vernon, Iowa, where the family was temporarily residing whilst his youngest son was securing college advantages there, October 1, 1883, aged 64 years, 3 months and 2 days. His remains were taken to Tama city for burial, and rest in the cemetery of that place. His widow now resides at Cottonwood Falls, Kansas.

They had nine children, five sons and four daughters:

WILLIAM FOLMER,

FRANCIS,

ELIZABETH CAROLINE,

SUSAN BARBARA,

DANIEL OSCAR,

MARY ALICE,

JOHN EDGAR,

EMMA JANE,

Church, September 25, 1901, Orrville Marden Ellis, of Cottonwood Falls, Chase County, Kansas, where they now reside.
5. DANIEL OSCAR, born in Turbut Township, Pennsylvania, May 24, 1850, and was baptized by Rev. Daniel Gring. While an infant his parents moved to Tama County, Iowa. He graduated from Iowa College in 1874; married Catharine Georgiana Otis, a college classmate, July 14, 1874. He at once established a real estate business, and became a member of the Board of Trustees of his Alma Mater, ten years after his graduation. He was instrumental in the creation and management of the "New England Loan and Trust Company," and was for years prior to and at the time of his death its President. His business interests led him to locate in Des Moines, Iowa, and subsequently as the business grew, in New York City. The family residence was Mont Clair, New Jersey, from which point he could conveniently reach his New York office. He was prominent in church, benevolent and financial circles. "With a high sense of honor and marked sincerity, he combined a justness of judgment, and an untiring fidelity that account for his being so much sought as a fiduciary adviser." "He was an intelligent student and an unusually competent teacher of the Bible, and was recognized as an active worker, a man of generous sympathies and a liberal giver." He was in New York, a director of the "Review of Reviews Company," and a member of the "Chamber of Commerce," at the time of his death. His physical condition had caused his friends uneasiness for several years. He was subject to violent attacks of vertigo and often complained of great physical distress. His death came suddenly and unexpectedly by drowning, September 26, 1898, aged 48 years, 4 months and 2 days. His body was found floating in the North River, at the foot of Fourteenth Street, Hoboken, New Jersey. His remains were taken to Des Moines, Iowa, where they rest in Woodlawn Cemetery. His family relations were most congenial and happy. They had seven children:

Katharine Clare, born May 20, 1875; married October 10, 1889, Frederick Cole Dudley. They have one child, Katharine, born September, 25, 1900.

Mary Genizieve, born May 2, 1877.
